mer's letter is as follows:
Birmingham, Ala., June 7, 1930.
Hon, Frederick I, Thompson, Mobile, Alabama:
Dear Fred: I think had you not become a candidate, I would have been content to take only a quiet part in the coming primary but now I cannot remain silent when I look back over the many ties that have bound us together in the past.
I have not forgotten 1914, the year my father made his race for a second term as governor. You and your paper gave him an overflowing measure of support. I remember your editorials. I have only recently reread the one of May 10, 1914; "Governor Comer's administration established the fact that lobbylists should not have control of a fairs in Alabama. He himself became a real governor.

"Governor Comer's administration, and through his influence, greatly improved the educational interest of the state; resulting in better buildings, longer school terms, better pay for teachers; appropriations for rural schools raised 100 per cent, and the whole school system invigorated and energized.

Your work for an open Warrior through a developed Mobile port, your fine service as a member of the shipping board have been giv-en public recognition, and if you could have had your way, Mr. Ford would today have had a great in-dustrial development along the Ten-nessee river with thousands of wheels turning by water, which to-day, after ten years, continues to flow idly over Wilson Dam. I have read statements question-ing the policy pursued by your pa-pers preceding the 1928 general elec-tion, statements questioning your right even to become a candidate in the coming democratic primary under the rules laid down by the state executive committee.

I read your editorial which you wired from Houston; I read your editorial on the Saturday before the election and, as I told you shortly after the election, I think that there editorials had more to Elba. The beneficiary traded with the local merchant he chose; the Red Cross paid the bill. This gave a volume of business to the local mercantile firms. This trade was very encouraging to them; in fact, without it, many of them could not have survived. By this system money was placed in circulation, business was re-established, financial confidence restored, and many good citizens, who would have otherwise left the town were retained. You would probably like to know the economic value of the relief given the town of Elba by the American Red Cross. The Red Cross spent about $35,000 in the emergency relief and about $65,000 for permanent rehabilitation. However, these figures do not represent the true economic value of the work done by the Red Cross.
